

again, the Department of Health would establish a toll-free telephone number to me says access with a capital "A". Having some contact and people, I'm sure, go through a series, there are all different ages of women, different times in their life, different times during the area when they are dealing with a pregnancy and what their future might be. The fact that they could pick up the telephone and be able to talk to someone and to get the kind of information that is good information, that's factual information. And also in number five they are looking at the department would identify agencies and facilities in the state which are appropriately geographically dispersed for the maintenance of the materials described in that subdivision and also make available to identified locations sufficient materials to meet the anticipated and established need. Not only could you call; they would tell you a place you could go. I'd like to share with you a brochure that's put out by the Department of Health to show you what kind of geographical areas there are in the Nebraska Reproductive Health Care Program that is currently in place and what they now do. They help Nebraskans get educational, medical and social services that they wouldn't normally receive and these health centers do not duplicate medical services already provided by Nebraska's health professionals. Some of the things that they do, one, is they enable individuals to freely determine the number and spacing of their children, which aids in reducing maternal and infant...

SENATOR HILLMAN: ...mortality and promotes the health of mothers and children. A second thing that they do is screen for breast and cervical cancer. Third is prevent sexually transmitted disease and HIV-AIDS. Four, they serve men and women and teens in needs of services. They promote individual community awareness and education on health prevention. They conduct educational programs designed to respond to local community needs. These people are in the business of health and they also know their own local community. The services that they provide are education, medical history, blood pressure, hemoglobin, urine analysis, breast exam, pelvic exam, pap smear, STD testing and treatment, pregnancy testing and information, birth control method if desired, counseling, appropriate referral and follow-up. Additional services include preconception counseling and...
